

A pair of hands, one above the other, holding a large, vibrant pink rose. The hands are positioned as if presenting the flower. The background is a soft, light blue-grey gradient. White, elegant swirls and flourishes are scattered around the rose and hands. The overall mood is romantic and delicate.

Heart of the Flower is an unflinching exploration of the beautiful diversity of women's genitals, free of judgement, shame and embarrassment. Fifty everyday women have posed for up-close and personal photographs that show their genitals from many different and rarely seen angles. Each woman writes candidly with wit, wisdom, passion, even despair, about her relationship with her vulva.

The book brings into light the ins and outs of the female sexual anatomy, and demystifies and challenges the way society views women's genitals. Heart of the Flower is designed to normalise and celebrate diversity at a time when labial reconstructions have reached an all-time high and women's body image is at an all-time low.
